PodLift is a simple software utility that supplies you with intuitive options for transferring audio tracks and playlists between computers and iPod. It can directly import data into the iTunes library/ Hassle-free installation and simple GUI The setup procedure does not take a long time to finish, and it sports only familiar options that shouldn't impose any difficulties. As far as the interface is concerned, PodLift adopts a classical window with a straightforward look, that immediately loads the iPod tracks in a list in the main frame, provided that the device is connected to the PC. Easily transfer songs and configure settings You can preview songs in a built-in player, make a custom selection or pick all tracks at once, indicate a saving directory, and start the transfer immediately. Likewise, the iPod playlist can be sent directly to the iTunes library. It is possible to reload the iTunes playlists, load a music database for the iPod to find out song information, duplicate the playlist, specify a folder for automatically copying all files there, specify the tags to include in the file name (track number, artist, album, title), as well as disable warnings for duplicates. Evaluation and conclusion The tool leaves a small footprint on system resources, thanks to the fact that it needs low CPU and RAM to work properly. However, it failed to start on later Windows editions in our tests. It may have some compatibility issues due to the fact that it has not been updated for a while. On top of that, it does not come equipped with advanced settings. Nevertheless, it is free to use, so anyone can give it a go. A: I had the same problem, and I've come across it in some random forums. That's why I wanted to try something like this program, since it's free and can be used without any limitations. After some search I've found this. They told me it could be a problem with this version. They recommend to update this to the last stable version. I did that and it worked. I hope it helps someone who was searching for the same!
