Today we are releasing an updated version of our weekly server compatibility list to ensure that Minecraft is working and playable. This week, we've been working hard to prevent the crash that was introduced last week and have fixed all of the crashes. In the last week, there were a few crashes, and we are happy to announce that we've released a fix for the October 31st crash. This crash was introduced with the Entertainment Update, and we've had it in the test bed for a few weeks now. We have fixed it and will be pushing out a hotfix to fix this and the other ongoing crashes. We also have a fix for the crash that occurred yesterday, thanks to the spelunker that caught this one. This crash, for anyone that is experiencing it, is in the first chunk of Minecraft. It happens very early, and if a player is in creative mode, the game won't load. To play, exit the game completely. One of the most annoying bugs that we've been working on for some time now is the one where players could crash on level up. This should be fixed now, and we'll be pushing out the hotfix for you all so that the game is working properly. Thanks to all of you for reporting these issues, and thanks for playing! We'll see you in the world! Back to Studio With Laura Swisher and Jack Emmert (45:38)With live streaming to start a few days ago I decided to see what all the fuss is about and set up my iCam... Anyway, I was out and about today and turned on the bluetooth and my iPhone 4 to stream to it, this is when I realised that I hadn't updated the firmware to v3.0. A few seconds after I got
