The study, which looked at 500 economists, found that the total net worth of the top 20% of Americans is equal to 60% of total wealth in the US. On the other hand, the bottom 20% controls just 4% of it. The study: Backed by Harvard University, the university's Kennedy School of Government and the National Bureau of Economic Research, the study was led by economists, Barry Bluestone, a senior lecturer at the school and a former managing director of the Economist Intelligence Unit, and Northeastern University economist Richard Freeman. The team used data from the Census Bureau's Survey of Consumer Finances in 2011 and 2012 to create a measure of wealth that includes both household income and the value of home equity. Their data and calculations were based on the full individual asset and liabilities measured by the survey, including pension plans and stock holdings, and real estate values. The researchers did not consider companies or financial institutions, such as banks. "In the aggregate, our estimate of the total wealth of households in the bottom 20 percent
