Written by Leonard Graves and directed by Byron Haskin, it first aired on October 11, 1969. In the episode, a group of Talosian giants in a laboratory are exposed to phaser radiation, accidentally reversing the effects of the radiation, while a woman trapped on the planet with them is astonished to encounter Captain Kirk and Spock. It was the first episode of the series to be broadcast after the debut of the original Star Trek series, which ran from 1966 to 1969. It marked the return of Leonard Nimoy as Spock, after his prior role in the original series. Plot A group of scientists aboard the Enterprise are monitoring planet Talos IV, observing a type of lightning. The ship's science officer, Spock, notices that none of the creatures on the planet appear to be reacting to the bolts of lightning, despite being exposed to the same form of radiation as the humans who are conducting the study. However, when an electrical storm suddenly erupts, the lightening is supercharged and kills the lab personnel conducting the study. The scientists attempt to reverse the effects of the radiation, performing several different experiments. Spock, Kirk, and Dr. McCoy fail to produce the results they had been expecting, but the duo's efforts are marred when the crew are called to the recreation room, where Spock, McCoy, and a Talosian have been playing chess. McCoy accidentally knocks Spock's mate onto the table, and Kirk attempts to defuse the situation by playing his game with the Talosian, much to Spock's annoyance. Meanwhile, the female lab worker, Charin, is astonished to find Kirk and Spock sitting at a chess table and is unable to fathom why. Production This episode was the first to be produced following the debut of the original Star Trek series. The first script, e79caf774b
