But it has been some years since it has been updated.I’m sure many here know that the JS execution environment on Oracle Solaris has a problem where either code doesn’t execute or the code does execute and doesn’t do what you think it is going to do. The problem has been around at least since Oracle 11. In my last post, I showed how to roll back transactions when other code changes the database in ways we don’t expect. Imagine that you create a new table, insert some records, then delete some. All of this runs as part of the same transaction (it is started when the transaction is started) and you want the new table to be part of that transaction. But, someone else already has the table you just created. Your table is gone, they now have the table, and your transactions don’t have what you think they do. In Oracle, you can mark this situation with “NOLOGGING”, which is a way of getting the database to refuse transactions that have other transactions with this issue. You can mark them as NOLOGGING with a specific DDL statement. ALTER TABLE RENAME TO RENAME_TABLE1 NOLOGGING; The problem is, that is a DDL statement and won’t do anything until the DDL is committed. If you try to do other DML statements, you get an error about SQLT_NOLOGGING: SQL Error: ORA-14414, SQLSTATE=ORA-14414 There’s an undocumented method, you can put the SQL statement into a SQL script and execute
