Where does the idea for this game come from? The very first game i ever created was a small game called kite-runner. i made this game for a Christmas gift for my boyfriend who was busy at the time. Once he unwrapped it and played it he thought it was pretty cool and it just kind of stuck with him. As my interest in games grew, i got into adult games and LEGO games that weren't focused on puzzle games. One day i was messing around with some other LEGO games and saw how they worked and thought why cant i make one game, but with puzzles, where all you do is press buttons and complete challenges, and i just kinda kept working on this idea until i got it to where i wanted it to be. The "good guy" aspect is not intended to be a metaphor for anything here as much as it is a literal interpretation of the idea that the majority of people on the platform are actually good. The world's negative news cycle in 2018 and 2019 could be thought of as a game set up for and played by "bad guys" who are out to destroy the innocent. How are the good guys different? The "good guy" side is made up of people who are not bad to their fellow players, but moreso are not "game hackers" who use the platform for malicious purposes. The platform itself also is set up in a way that benefits a world of neutral players who participate purely for the fun and to help others. Why the "good guy" side? It is the side that has the most power to influence the platform in a positive way, because at the end of the day, the amount of players can be just as bad or worse than a single modder. What is the game about? The game is about a team of "good guys" trying to complete challenges in order to save their friends who are trapped in the game. It is very reminiscent of the Mario series, with the main character going through a tower of different levels to fight enemies and find his/her way to the final level. We want to use the platform to save lives. What would be the ideal scenario? Ideally, the scenario would involve our platform being used to save lives in various ways. This can take a variety of forms, but two of the most
