As previewed in Illuminata, the updated 2020 web-oriented Photoshop has made it easier to crowdsource content on the web and seamlessly apply assets to the final image. You can now load photos from your computer's hard drive, Instagram, Twitter, or Dropbox directly into Photoshop. Once you select an item, Photoshop compares the file type and metadata to existing files on your computer to find a match. Then, Photoshop automatically applies the asset to the artwork in the image along with a weighting to the color, saturation, and other features of the file. (Illuminata will explain the file types in more detail.) Designers can then further refine the results with a crop tool or other adjustments, and even smooth out a few imperfections to make adjustments more precise. This means no more scrolling through a gallery of images to find the perfect match.
